The entire clan can enjoy a trip to Greensboro, North Carolina, which combines a small town feel with a great city of attractions. Its historical significance and children's activities make the city a popular choice for families. Greensboro has historically been important to African-American civil rights. On February 1, 1960, four students staged a sit-in at the dining table, and now their efforts are immortalized by a statue on the campus of North Carolina State University. Charlotte Hawkins Brown founded a school for African Americans in 1902, which eventually saw more than 1,000 graduates and is now a state historical site and museum. Other historic sites in the area include the Old Guildford Mill, a fully functioning mill founded in 1767, which continues to make (and sell) all natural, stone land products. Carolina Model railroaders, with its display of miniature trains navigating detailed landscapes, will be of interest to children of all ages. Young people will enjoy going to work in Our Town, an exhibition at the Greensboro Children's Museum that features a DC-9 jet, a police cruiser, and a pizza cafe. Children can also take part in ArtQuest, part of the Green Hill Arts Center of North Carolina, which provides an interactive studio where creative minds can draw, weave, mold clay, and more. Green Hill also provides five different exhibitions each year featuring North Carolina artists. Another beloved family is sent to see the game. Greensboro Grasshoppers, a branch of the Florida Marlins, has attracted more than one million fans since 2005. Carolina Dynamo play only 20 minutes and are affiliated with the Major League Soccer Columbus crew. Flights to Greensboro arrive and depart from Piedmont Triad International Airport, just a 20-minute drive from the city centre. The nomination of Katie ViscoNo, it's not bowling balls. We treat all our visitors as locals and make them feel at home in our city. Our volunteers keep the city clean and the trails safe for all of us. We have free music festivals and walks through the art gallery in the city centre every month where free food and drinks were served. We have over 20 sculptures and over 11 murals all over our city that we are all proud of. Stories about BrevardWe have a lot of fundraising for those who need it, mainly for people struggling with cancer or disease, or if someone needs help paying for funeral expenses for loved ones. We had a father of four fighting an incurable disease for which we all came together, holding a big silent auction with a big donated food and drink in the beautiful farm pavilion. It was a very touching event. We have street races, including one, to raise money for scholarships in memory of a local soldier who died abroad. We are home to many nonprofits, public gardens, public kitchens and food Ducks off and quacking at the summer duck fundraising race. (Credit: Karen Ruhl) We moved to Hudson six months ago and the people who live and work here are the friendliest I have all experienced. They are helpful, kind and care for their community. The city is located between two major cities, but feels like it is a small city of America with a touch of country. Enjoy restaurants and businesses on the main street and feel good walking around the city. Everything you need here or near. Visit the train museum or have a picnic in one of the many parks. Located in the foothills of the Blue Ridge Parkway, this picture is the perfect place. The stories about Hudson, where we first moved, I had to go to the hospital by ambulance. We were only here for about a week and didn't know anyone. Our neighbors went out to check it out and then followed up to see if I needed anything. As soon as my husband was at home, they stopped by one by one to introduce themselves and see if we needed anything. Everyone asked if we belonged to the church still and invited us to join them on them (most all go to church here in Hudson). Over the next few months, we learned more about our neighbors and the cakes and gifts brought. Other neighbors help get the house fixed and the yard in shape. The city recently had a butterfly festival - every city worker and volunteer that we met wanted to be sure we were all set. They made a special parking position for my husband who is disabled and needs a walker. The mayor, Janet Winkler, took a while to pass the festival and walk to each booth. The service crew kept the streets clean and was as friendly as they could be - quite a difference from what we saw, especially as they work so hard at these events. The city library employs great people. They are useful and share their favorite selections of movies and books. They always help people who use computers, and if you happen to run into them outside the library, they remember you! McDonald's® continues its tradition of creating innovative menu items with their three new Signature Crafted Recipe sandwiches-each featuring flavored ingredients. Spicy pico Guacamole sandwich, savoury sweet bacon barbecue, and sweet maple bacon Dijon sandwiches can everyone be personalized with a choice of 100% beef 1/4 pound patty, buttermilk crispy chicken, or artisan grilled chicken, all at a choice of toasted artisan roll or sesame bun. Compassion abounds and we welcome everyone with our southern charm, Pamela O'Connor and Donna McKuiniRaley's balloon festival fills the sky with color. (Credit: Pamela O'Connor) The story of Pamela in my opinion, compassion should not be a global campaign tackling hunger around the world or the world, but there may be a small gesture of kindness to a neighbor or or It starts with a simple smile or Hello like you today? When I moved to Raleigh a few years ago from the north, I wasn't ready for all the smiles and kindness of the people here. At first the friendliness was a little unnerving and you ask: What do they want? Since then, I've jumped on a compassion train. Raleigh really cares about his people and their needs, and is constantly trying to improve the community. This is a very diverse area that makes a huge contribution to our ability to unite. Many of us here have no relatives in the area, forcing us to make new friends and try new things. Donna's story grew up in Raleigh, while he grew up a lot he still has that hometown charm. You won't meet a stranger and we have a lot of great activities for people to do. There is always something going on, whether you like art, sports, or social events. A lot of northerners have moved here, and while we like to tease them about being Yankees, it's all in good fun. A friend moved from New York, and he was told a lot: Bless your heart! I told him this once, because of the faux pas he asked what it meant he heard that much. When I told him it mattered differently than he expected, he laughed out loud! We like to joke and joke with the Yankees! We have a wide variety of people who come from everywhere and we welcome them with open hugs. I love living in Raleigh, it has everything you need, but with the charm of a small town that I have seen over and over again. Stories about RaleighThere's rescue group, Rottweilers Hearts Rescue, that promotes puppies and makes the public aware of how sweet and loyal Rotties can be. Barbara May and Jay Westall are so passionate that their joy spreads around through their many events. One lady was very afraid of the Rotties, but after a few moments with a gentle giant and the family adopted him, and has since taken another! (Credit: Donna McGuinn) Another special person is Sharon Shelton, who has a group of meetings called Listen To Your Life. It's a wonderful community of people who want to learn and grow about themselves. After the meeting, you feel filled and ready to face the world. I know most people in my grocery store, post office, Office Depot, etc. it's great to see familiar faces in places I go. Our community is teaming up with the Nextdoor app, which is like a private social media place for your neighborhood. For example, when an elderly neighbor suddenly lost his wife, I posted on Nextdoor to see if someone would be willing to cook for him. The answer was amazing. In order not to suppress it, everyone brought their dishes to my house, and then I brought them to him all in one trip. It was quite an effort, but a huge success. It's Christmas, the single mother of the man with severe medical problems didn't have enough money to buy her children's children I posted again on Nextdoor to see if someone could spare some extra gifts for the kids. The answer was once again overwhelming! People came in droves to drop out presents, one even a bicycle for a boy. Gifts and gift cards galore came rolling in. People really care and want to help here. When another hurricane proved inevitable, I posted my phone number and email account on Nextdoor for my neighbors to use if they needed help with non-911, such as floods that prevent you from getting food or supplies. I also suggested my grill cook if gas and electrical appliances were faulty. Another incredible answer. People in other communities have taken the lead and started doing the same in their neighborhoods, so, in fact, we've reached at least 6,000 people. When an animal is lost, someone takes them and posts pictures of the animal, and the owner is usually found during the day. We found many animals again that needed a new place to live. In other words, we work together as a close-knit community and really care. The role has many virtues ... too much to list, but among them are events such as Best Friends/Worst Enemies: Understanding the Social Life of Children and Compassion International, which is an interactive tour that immerses visitors in everyday life in another country. This is a four-day event where visitors will be invited on an independent journey where they will be immersed in the lives and stories of two children living in Uganda or Bolivia. The story of each child begins in difficult conditions, but ends with hope. Raleigh also sees events from organizations such as Silver Compassion, a ministry designed to help navigate the complex world of aging. Islamic Aid is also part of a coalition of nonprofits rebuilding homes in Princeville since the city was flooded by Hurricane Matthew in 2016. It's a very physically demanding job, but Islamic Aid is seeing more and more volunteers return to Princeville to help. Help.
